

Miss Money Penny's dream:

'I'd have Roger as a husband and Sean as a lover'

MISS MONEYPENNY knows James Bond better than any woman — and now she's chosen the spy who she loved.

Lois Maxwell played Miss Money Penny for 25 years — but after being axed from the latest movie, she's no longer in Her Majesty's Secret Service.

"If I had my chance," she says, "I would like to be married to Roger Moore and have Sean as a lover."

Lois, pushing 60, is the only actor to have appeared in all the Bond movies — and here's how the 007s measured up in her book:

● Sean Connery: Lois met the first James Bond in producer Cubby Broccoli's office in London in 1964.

He was, she recalls, "a poor young actor in corduroys".

His dialogue for Dr No (1963) was filmed one line at a time. And he had to be groomed in every facet, from how to act to how to dress to the proper table manners.

Three films later, Lois attended a cast party and caught Connery wolfing down caviar with a large serving spoon. "Sean," she reprimanded him, "you mustn't eat from that." His instant response: "I can have caviar whenever I want now."

But Lois says Connery also totally lacked vanity. "He conquered his disappearing hairline with a toupee, but everyone knew he had one on, because at the end of every scene he would throw it off," she says.

● George Lazenby: The shortest-reigning James Bond, Lazenby played in just one movie, On Her Majesty's Secret Service (1969).

He was also the most unpopular Bond, giving rise to reports that co-star Diana Rigg ate garlic to upset him during a love scene.

But Lois reveals that she and Diana were having a lunch of squid "in loads of wine and garlic" when all at once, Diana said: "Oh, my God! I'm doing a love scene with George this afternoon." Lois got Diana to chew tea leaves to try to kill her offensive breath.

● Roger Moore: Lois' favorite James Bond. "Roger really was the best," she says.

Lois doesn't have such fond memories of the "Bond Beauties".

"They were an unbelievably dreary lot," she says. "They may look absolutely gorgeous, but their minds were blank. Their faces were completely forgettable."